Anacaona Boutique Hotel, Anguilla

Anguilla is one of those beautiful islands that flies slightly below the average traveler's radar. It is not as heavily booked because it takes a bit of travel to get there. If you want to stay in Anguilla you fly into St. Martin and take a small boat for the short trip but once there you will be glad that you made the effort. Cruise ships do not stop there so this island can be considered a pristine retreat. If you need to shop you can always hop on over to St. Martin for the day, but once you see this island I don't think that you will want to leave.

Sparkling waters lap against sugar soft beaches, palm trees sway in the breeze and as isolated as you feel the food here is some of the best in the Caribbean.

A new hotel has quietly opened this fall called Anacaona Boutique Hotel. This is a small 27 room and villa full-service boutique hotel located in the heart of the trendy West End overlooking Meads Bay Beach.

A 27-room property will offer a decidedly different experience than a large resort but some people look for the intimate property where everyone knows your name and is there to see that your vacation is every bit as wonderful as you expect it to be. Usually a property this small has a price that staggers the average traveler but since it is newly opened you can get a great deal.

Rates for the remaining fall dates up to December 17 start as low as $150 per night. Rates January through March 31 start at $250 per night. Gratuity and government tax are additional and meal plans can be purchased. Airfare is additional. Check out this property at www.anacaonahotel.com.

Oh and what does Anacaona mean? It means flower or feather of gold. Anacaona was also the Princess of Hispaniola.
